Closing Remarks	Lynne Coy-Ogan, EdD
Recessional	Kimberly Davis, OTD

Although modern trends, technologies, and convenience have dissolved our observance of many traditions, today's universities continue to visibly honor graduates through academic dress. In fact, the cap and gown have come to symbolize the event of "graduation." The wearing of special gowns and hoods is a practice that actually dates back to the 12th and 13th centuries when universities began to form. The baccalaureate degree was recognized with its premiere ceremony at England's Oxford University in 1432, and over 200 years later, in 1642, Harvard became the first college in America to hold a commencement ceremony.

Clerical attire was the typical dress of scholars – whether students or teachers – during those medieval times; long gowns provided necessary warmth in unheated buildings. Hoods as head-coverings also suited the purpose of resisting the cold. The Celts and their priests, the Druids, initiated the wearing of hoods to distinguish a level of training. Only the Druids wore mantles with attached hoods to mark their superiority within society.

Of course, the giving of hoods is now an important part of our graduation ceremonies. Hoods serve to communicate the individual school, degree and field of study through their varied length and the colors of the lining and binding. The hoods we use today have evolved a great deal since the middle ages. No longer a serviceable article of clothing, they are now elongated scarves draped over the shoulders and displayed down the back with the lining turned inside out. They are rich with meaning, symbolizing authority, prestige, and the identification of a new graduate's institution and the degree being awarded.

Although a hood is always black in color, the lengths, edges, and linings have individual significance. For example, the graduate earning a bachelor's degree receives a hood of three feet. A master's degree graduate is bestowed with a hood of three and one-half feet, and a four-foot length denotes a doctoral recipient.

The color of the hood's lining identifies the institution conferring the degree. Husson University's colors of green and gold are indicated on our graduates' hoods. The velvet trim on the hood is indicative of the scholar's field of study.
